Stuart has been extracting, milling and kiln drying Scottish hardwoods and softwoods for 15 years and for the last couple of years developing Woodworkz.

Our timber is almost 95% windblown or as with the picture on the right too close to power lines.

Once in our yard where it is milled on the Timberking 2200, the UK's largest narrow gauge mill (capable of 6.5m length, 840mm in width and 735mm high).

After air drying the boards are kiln dried if necessary to around 9-12% moisture content in the case of Hardwoods and then stored in our dehumidified dry store. Here customers (both commercial and public) can choose the individual boards for their work.

The process starts with the extraction of the timber from a site. This can include just lifting from the roadside to withdrawing the wood from the centre of an estate along narrow foot-paths.

From the picture above the logs are transported to our yard and then they are turned into the boards shown in the picture to the right. Although they are not the same log, they are the same tree.

The planks are then pressure washed and “stickered” for air drying, prior to kiln drying.

Actually the planks on the right have been sold, to be made into parts for a wheelhouse on a boat and part of the log above is going to Shetland for a dining table.....

The use of our timber is limited to your imagination!

So you are now thinking hardwood, let us put your mind at rest. Woodworkz can supply both Hardwoods and Softwoods for beams, cladding and boat-skin, we can even manufacture cruck frames.

So think of your next “Grand Design” and then think Woodworkz.

Why go to the south, when the south comes to Woodworkz for the best of Scottish timber.

Yes this is a sales brochure, but when you sell the best, you need to tell everyone!
